

Kanine Korner

By Francis X. Lohmann

Your Christmas puppy is probably now at the age when you're regularly taking him outdoors for exercise and as part of his house-training routine.

He needs a collar and leash for these expeditions. The selection of the proper collar is important for his comfort and safety.

Choose a flat, supple collar which buckles around the neck, or a slip-lead (combination collar and leash), both are easy on soft puppy skin.

The collar fits correctly if you can slip your finger between it and the puppy's neck but can't be pulled over the neck. As a matter of fact, this is an accurate gauge for testing collar size on any age dog.

CHECK the collar's fit as the puppy grows. Most veterinarians can recount cases of young dogs whose collars, too tight and unnoticed, became embedded in the skin. Be careful in this regard with flea collars, too.

When your puppy is grown, outfit him with a flat collar if he's short coated; a round collar if long or wirecoated. These styles cause less wear on the respective coat types.

"Choke" collars of leather, nylon or chain, are usually recommended for dogs in obedience training. They enable the trainer to correct his dog by a quick snap and release of the collar.

HARNESSES are not suggested for general use. They offer no means of discipline when the dog misbehaves on the leash. In fact, the tugging sensation on his chest and shoulders encourages the dog to pull. I might add, too, excessive use of a harness can throw puppy shoulders out of alignment.

Wide decorative collars are not comfortable on dogs with short necks. Also, their heads and necks often have the same circumference and wide collars easily can be slipped off.

BARKS AND YAPS—Jenny, a Border Terrier, appears regularly as a TV personality on a British School program "Finding Out . . ." The founder of one of the world's largest rubber empires was a Scottish veterinarian named John Dunlop who in 1888 invented the pneumatic bicycle tire. The rest is history.

BREED OF THE WEEK—Pomeranian . . . Incredible as it may seem, the dainty little Pomeranian is a relative of the much larger sled-dog breeds and the Keeshond. In spite of the great difference in size between these breeds, their relationship is shown in the sharply pointed muzzles, small erect, pointed ears, profuse, stand-off coats and curly tails, family characteristics of the arctic breeds.

The Pomeranian was known as a distinct breed as far back as the early 18th century. A good "Pom" is compactly built, close knit in frame and possesses plenty of sturdiness and stamina.

A HANDSOMELY groomed "Pom" looks very much like a ball of beautifully colored glistening hair, but under this lovely coat is a sound, active little dog.

The Pomeranian has ranked high in this country for many years. His bright little foxy face, vivacious personality and gleaming coat make it easy to understand the reason he has such a host of loyal supporters. The "Pom" tips the scales at about six pounds and in height seven inches.
